academic IMAGE promotes learning

The world that shall some day be theirs is waiting. In preparation for the problems and decisions accompanying life in such a world, students at Remington develop an interest, a quest for knowledge, a burning desire to discover and to comprehend, and in so doing create an academic image.

The school year passes quickly by, and the fleeting moments are seldom wasted. During the week students work earnestly, experimenting in the lab, listening to lectures, taking notes, and browsing in the library, perhaps doing research for term papers or just looking for good books to read. The weekends, signifying respite from the rigid disciplines of study, often are spent in cheering the team to victory or backing them in defeat. Perhaps, too, after the chaotic shouts of an unexpected victory or an agonizing defeat have ebbed, throbbing tunes will blare from the high school lunchroom as students gather to dance and share daily happenings.

School Board Receives Federal Funds

Donald D. Utter, Principal, Remington School;
Billie J. Holmes, Superintendent, Tri-County

Irma Sutter, Secretary

1965-66 found the Tri-County School Corporation operating more smoothly as departments were organized, committees formed, and additional policies determined. Corporation officials and staff representatives lost no time in planning how best to use Federal funds designed to enrich the educational program. Remedial instruction in reading and arithmetic headed the list of suggestions. Other projects in the planning stage as the book went to press included the hiring of an M-1 teacher, the establishment of an industrial arts department, the expansion of the summer school program, and the addition of adult evening classes in those areas in which sufficient community interest was demonstrated.

Although these activities were merely projected, many improvements were actually made. Kindergartens were held for all units of the corporation. An electronic language laboratory was installed at Remington for use by the Spanish department. In December Miss Carol Nussbaum, speech and hearing therapist, joined the corporation staff.

Additional funds were made available for expansion of library and academic holdings as progress was the keynote.

Inquisitive Pupils Seek Answers to

Steve Kinsell, Jacque Lewis, and John Hageman conduct a physics experiment.

Big news in mathematics classes across the country was the study of "new" math, and Remington was no exception. From the elementary grades through advanced courses, new texts presented concepts that were sometimes confusing, but always interesting. 1966 found many parents studying too in an effort to understand the work being done by their children.

For the first time freshmen had a choice between biology and general science. Those electing biology met more exacting requirements than in previous years. Additional equipment and several library books were purchased for the zoology course, which was offered for the second year. Also this year physics and chemistry were both scheduled so that laboratory work might be done in smaller groups. Thus it has become possible for a science major at Remington to be enrolled in a science course during each of his four years.

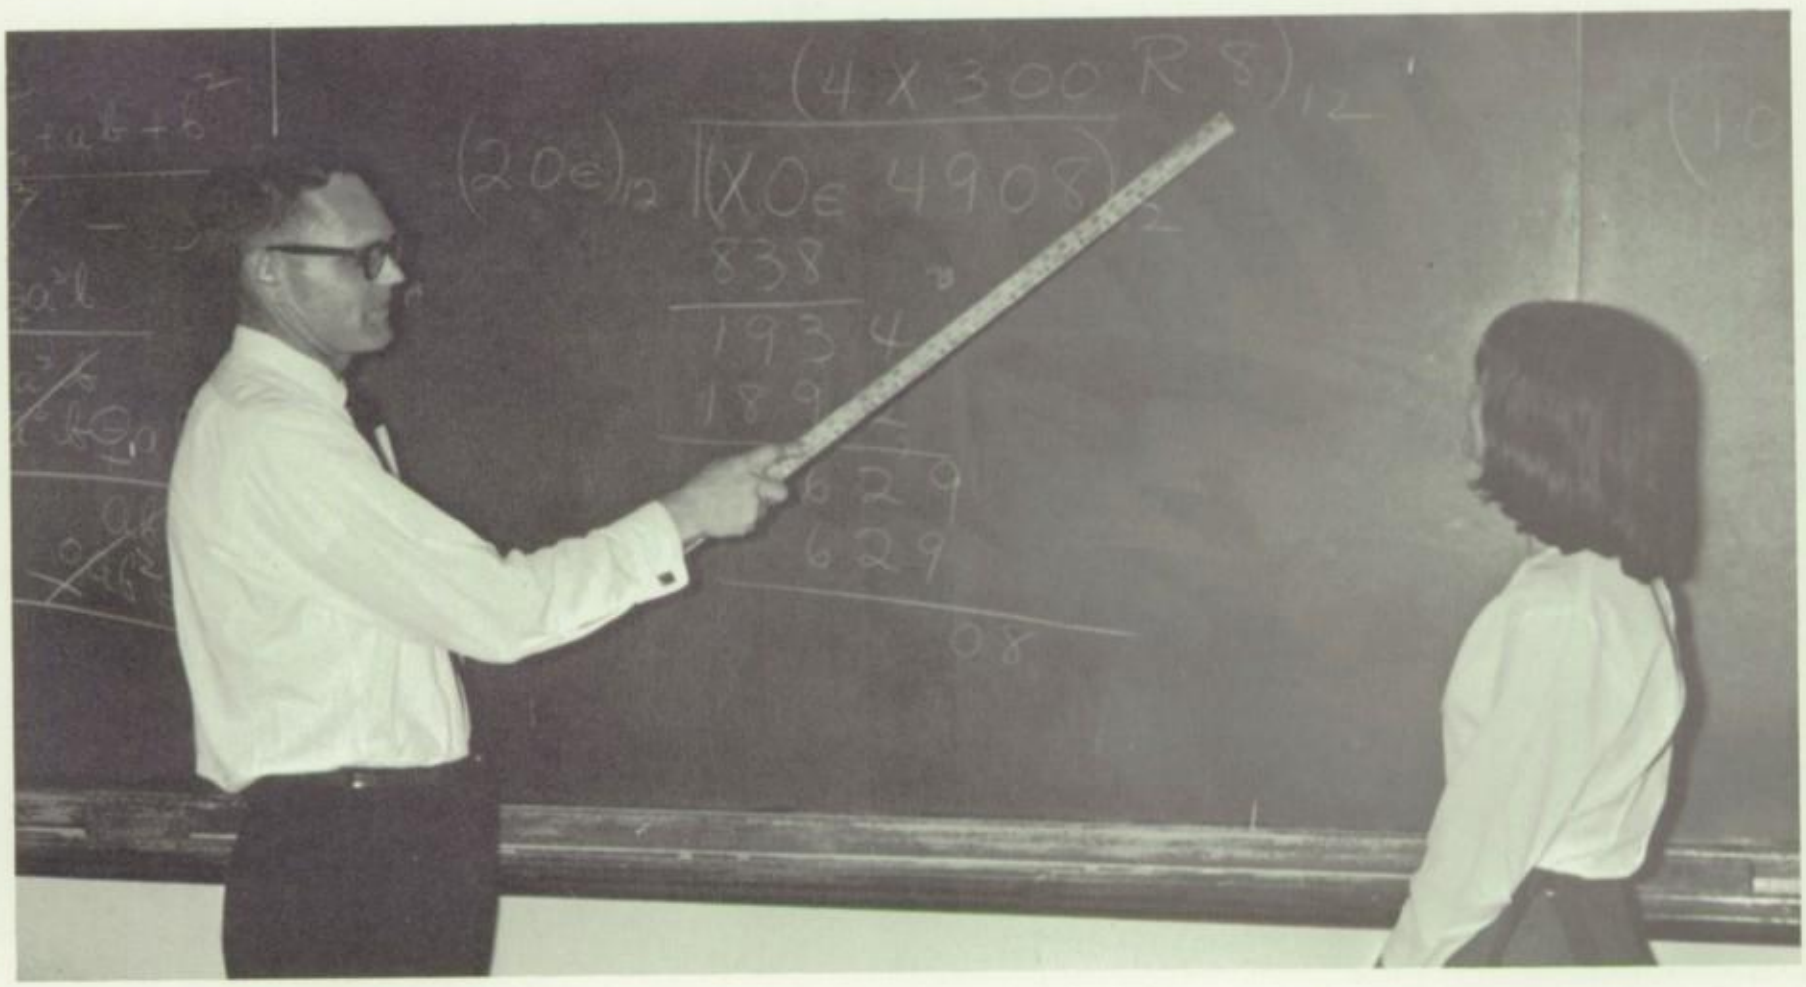
To stimulate performance, science-math teachers, under the auspices of the Service Club, annually select an outstanding science-mathematics student who plans to continue study toward a career in that field. Winners of this coveted honor receive medals, and their names are engraved on a plaque which is hung in the building. This marks the fourth year for the award, and competition for the distinction has grown much keener as larger numbers of students choose professions in that area.

Intriguing Math and Science Puzzles

Mr. Horn explains a chemical reaction to Norma Schini.

Mr. Moore, student teacher, points out the anatomy of a frog to zoology students Stuart Franson and Jim Knochel.

Pam Heinzelman listens as Mr. Erickson explains a problem in modern math.



Members of Spanish II class develop aural comprehension by listening to a taped program.

New Lab Boosts Language Department

Mrs. Bowman listens to the responses that Gene Porter and Joyce Schieler are recording in their audio notebooks.

The installation of a language laboratory provided opportunities for the more than seventy students of Spanish to improve their aural--oral skills. By means of an electronic loop, pupils receive taped or recorded lessons through individual transistorized headsets equipped with microphones which provide speaking as well as listening practice. Battery-powered audio notebooks with carrying cases enable interested persons to work with tapes at home. A major consideration in the selection of the laboratory was the fact that facilities may be moved or expanded with a minimum expenditure. Another step in the development of a stronger modern language program was the scheduling of a third year Spanish class.

Speech Is New Addition to Curriculum

Kris Saltwell gives an oral book report in English.

In an effort to make students literate and articulate, English specialists have developed an integrated program of language, literature, and composition to be introduced in Indiana schools in two years. Local English teachers employ varied techniques to perfect communication skills. This year, under expanded Title III, they ordered several standard fiction, biography, and reference volumes for special use in the department curriculum.

Acton Counsels Remington and Wolcott

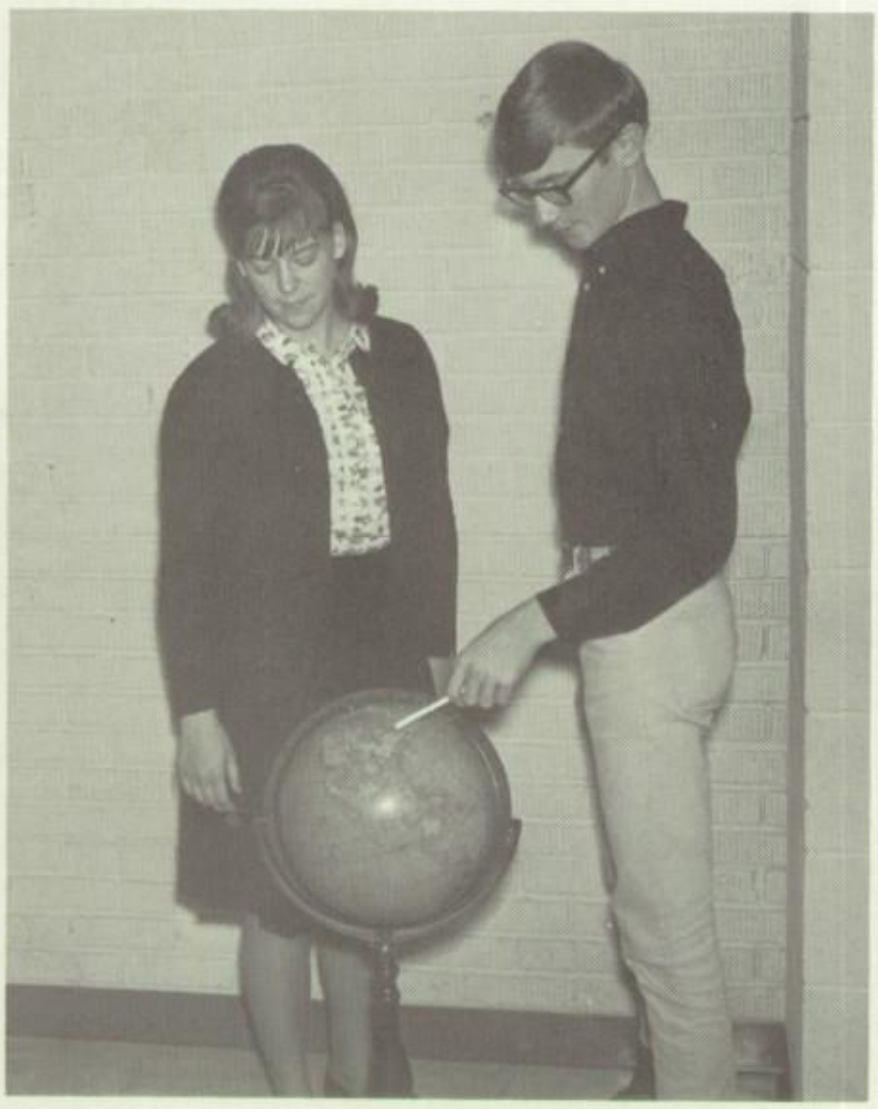
Mr. Acton explains the requirements of a technical school to Bob Waymouth.

Guidance director Paul Acton's calendar included conferences and group tours as well as routine testing. Conferences included a college admissions meeting at Butler and the Indiana Personnel and Guidance Conference at Notre Dame. Students attended the Special Education Conference explaining work with exceptional children. Others visited business and technical schools in Indianapolis and Fort Wayne. Mr. Acton also met with area college freshmen.

Nancy Hensler presents her argument in a debate on Viet Nam to moderator Marilyn Brooks and opponent Julie Arvin.

History Helps Crystallize Thinking

Sandra Worley and Kurt Bahler study the globe in world history class.



In observance of the Indiana Sesquicentenial, eighth grade history students did an unusual amount of library research during the first semester. They climaxed their study of Indiana history by writing term papers on topics of their choice, ranging from accounts of early pioneer life to biographical studies of political and literary personalities. The Indiana Historical Society provided much help in these projects. Sophomores concentrated on world history, while juniors studied American history in depth. All used new library resources and current periodicals to find background material for spirited debates on such timely topics as the Viet Nam crisis and the civil rights problem.

In preparation for their imminent roles as voters and active citizens, seniors benefited from courses in government, economics, and sociology.

First-year typists Nancy Hensler and Tom Wingard concentrate on accuracy and speed.

Richard Jarvis uses the calculator to prepare his bookkeeping assignment.

In Commerce Practice Makes Perfect

Purchase of a calculator and an additional adding machine increased the facilities of the crowded business department. Each year more graduates enter business college or major in business or secretarial courses. Consequently greater numbers of high school students take advantage of a basic business curriculum which ranges from business arithmetic to the advanced and challenging study of business law. Bookkeeping pupils work individually, many finishing a maximum course. In addition to completing the prescribed course of study in office practice, many typists prepare stencils for monthly issues of the school newspaper. They also provide occasional secretarial service for faculty members. In order to stimulate interest and reward achievement in the business area, teachers present annual awards to those persons reaching certain levels of efficiency.

Mrs. Corbin prepares a test for her business classes on the electric ditto machine.

Marie Wagner, Barbara Wasner, Linda Baxter, Sandra Reel, and Marilyn Brooks learn to knit in home economics class.

RHS Boasts New Vocational Teachers

Martin Wagner and Gary Milton help Bob Alberts weld in the farm shop.

Although the number of farmers declines each year, the percentage of farm-related careers is high. As a consequence, enrollment in vocational agriculture classes remains static, and even boys who do not live on the farm often find areas of interest in this department. Practical training prepares these students for continuation of study beyond high school or for work after graduation.

On the distaff side, many of the girls take advantage of the opportunity to improve their domestic skills. In an age when household help is scarce and living expenses are high, girls find it most helpful to be able to cook and sew efficiently and to manage a budget competently. All vocational students receive training in social skills which will better fit them for community participation.

In recent years the entire country has come to realize the importance of physical fitness. Although extramural sports provide invaluable competitive experience, participation is necessarily limited to a small percentage of the school enrollment. All students are required to take part in physical education classes through the sophomore year. This year a class was offered for interested upperclassmen. In addition to participating in various tournaments which stimulate healthy competition, pupils have enjoyed a well-rounded program of calisthenics, tumbling, dancing, and numerous exercises designed to give them wholesome recreation. Thus the majority of students have an opportunity to balance hours of mental discipline with periods of carefully directed physical activity so that they may keep their bodies, as well as their minds, alert and healthy.

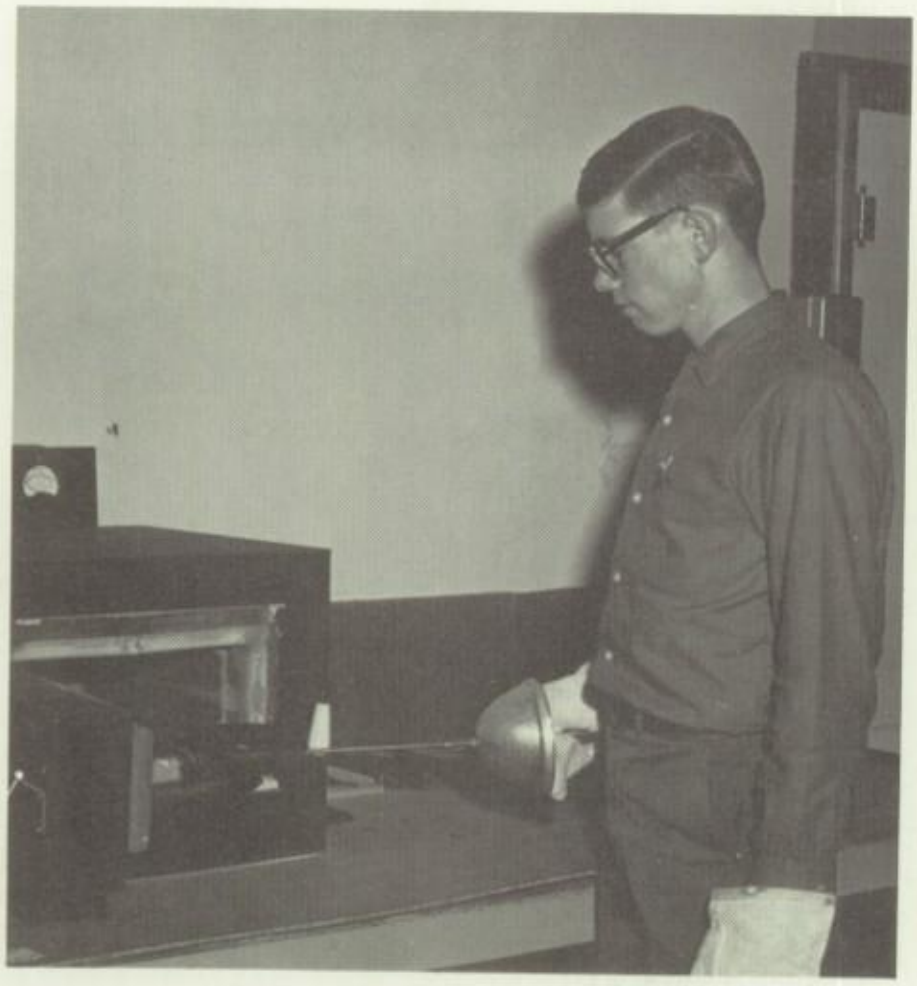
Art Develops Creativity of Students



Don Knochel checks his ceramic ash tray which has been baking in the kiln.

As in past years, music and art have played important roles at Remington. The interest displayed by both students and community has made the frequent programs presented by these departments even more enjoyable. Among new activities introduced this year, elementary musicians, accompanied by Miss Dye and Mrs. Bowley, attended the Young People's Symphony in the Hall of Music on the Purdue campus. The school corporation bought two new Fiberglas tubas and a bell lyre for the band, which consists of grades 8 through 12, younger students playing in the junior high band at Gilboa. Once again it was Remington's turn to host the district band and chorus contest. Students and director worked long and tiring hours making the necessary arrangements in preparation for this big responsibility.

SENIORS

Eleven years pass quickly, and through those years of preparation, involving discipline, homework, and examinations, the goal is ever there. As the seniors produce a class play, serve in important capacities in numerous activities, raise money in class projects, produce a yearbook, select Commencement invitations, exchange senior pictures, and choose colleges and careers, in the background is the image of that solemn moment when, robed in traditional cap and gown, each will cast but a fleeting glance backward as he turns to face the future with the optimism of youth.

CLASSES

For underclassmen each year projects a special image. Freshmen in bright green wait impatiently to select the colorful class sweaters which will mark their debut as sophomores. But in no time they are wrangling good-naturedly over the choice of the rings which will signify their more important status as juniors who will supervise concessions, present a class play, and entertain with a formal Prom. And, as the months fly by, many spend busy summer days designing clever senior cords which will usher in the final year of their high school lives.

ACTIVITIES

No image of high school life would be complete without participation in some of the many organizations. While membership in some is elective or based on the meeting of certain requirements, others are open to all interested persons. As a result, hardly any student graduates without having enjoyed the fun and direction provided by at least one extra-curricular activity. One achievement which few attain is the winning of the coveted honor blazer, worn by students meeting very rigid academic standards.

Council Plans Student Activities

R. Fitzpatrick, M. Brooks, D. May, Mr. Karns, S. Kinsell. KNEELING: E. Bellows, Pres., F. Karns, D. Mykrantz.

Mr. Loren Karns, able sponsor of the Student Council, has striven to instill in the minds of these representative members, a new and more challenging incentive for improving the social attitudes of the school. Decisions regarding student conduct, activities and procedures, and selections of various convocations constantly require careful consideration. As a result of last year's ruling, freshman initiation was discontinued this year. The council sponsored two all-school parties. Another task, choosing appropriate monthly convocations for 1966-67, was taken very seriously as members endeavored to schedule the most enjoyable, yet beneficial, programs from among the many offered.

Honor Society Has High Standards

FRONT ROW: B. Wasner, K. Schertz, C. Butcher, Treas., S. Vollmer, L. Baxter, M. Geib, N. Hensler, D. Faker, Sec. 2nd ROW: J. Arvin, L. Rogers, J. Schieler, N. Schini, D. May, P. Elliott, A. Knochel, Reporter, L. Goad, M. Brooks. 3rd ROW: M. Rowland, B. Bahler, S. Kinsell, S. Milton, K. Burns, Vice P., R. Dart, M. Goad, D. Taulman, C. Hansell, Pres. Not Pictured: Mr. Acton.

Students must work to their utmost in meeting and maintaining National Honor Society membership standards. Failure to earn a B average results in a warning, and if a student is unable to improve, he loses membership permanently. This year the society sought recognition in Remington through community projects. They hope, eventually, to contribute to the scholarship fund.

S. Waymire, D. Knochel, and S. Alberding dance at the all-school party.

An extremely active group this year, the canteen board, under the supervision of Mr. O'Neil, has contributed much to the social life of the students and of the community. Among various activities, they sponsor frequent record dances in the lunchroom after home basketball games and other school functions. High school students, their guests, and alumni are invited to attend. A donation of twenty-five cents per person helps to supply the canteen board treasury with sufficient funds for scheduled events. As in the past years, they plan to sponsor the spring all-school party with the eighth grade as honored guests. This year the annual Christmas Dance was a much-anticipated affair as board members worked to make the Yuletide decorations more appealing then ever, using the theme "Wonderland by Night." Bands were carefully screened in an effort to secure enjoyable music. Board members, chosen as representatives of the various classes, constitute an organization well worthy of the community's support.

Editor Cheryl Butcher and Sponsor Miss Wolf make newspaper assignments.

Interesting highlights and happenings involving students and teachers in the school make the school newspaper an enjoyable addition to the month's activities. Under the guidance of their competent editor, Cheryl Butcher, and advisor, Miss Wolf, staff members work at a feverish pace minutes before deadline time to put out the best possible paper. Representatives are chosen from grades 8-12. In the spring, the current editor steps down to make way for the incoming chief selected from the junior class by the advisor. This person puts out the first issue of the paper and also attends the I. U. Journalism Institute in the summer. Money from paper sales pays this expense. Students in office practice type, copy, and prepare stencils. Features continued this year are the Honor Society Spotlight and the crossword puzzle. The Rifle Range is sold at ten cents per copy at school and in a local place of business and is distributed throughout seven communities in this vicinity.

One of the first FFA activities was the annual pig scramble in which two "greenhands" received gilts. The boys winning pigs will donate gilts for the next year's scramble. Local FFA teams competed with other area teams in crop, dairy, soil, and livestock judging contests. A scrap drive proved to be such a good money making enterprise that members plan to repeat the project. Also they sold seeds. In a pest campaign, a senior-freshman team competed against a junior-sophomore squad, the winners being honored by a supper provided by the losers. Each month the member-of-the-month committee selected an outstanding boy about whom an article was published in the local newspaper. Plans for the parent-son banquet included entertainment and special guests, such as state officers. Steve Schurr represented the chapter at the national convention held in October at Kansas City. Mr. Cole entertained the boys with a pitch-in dinner at his home during the holidays.

Librarians Assist Readers in Need

A. Knochel, Mrs. Miller, L. Rogers, D. May, G. Baer, J. Biddle, Mrs. Bowman, N. Hensler, M. Westerberg.

The purpose of Sigma Alpha Theta, the high school sorority at Remington, is to bring a little joy to the community as well as to the girls themselves, a worthy goal for any service group. Officers were installed last fall in a candlelight ceremony which preceded initiation of new members. Mothers and women of the faculty were guests at this tea. The girls also sang carols for shut-ins during the Christmas season. As we go to press, sponsor Mrs. Helen Nesbitt and the executive council are planning spring activities.

Expansion of the library area last summer provided space for non-fiction and reference materials in a special study section apart from magazines, newspapers, and fiction. More extensive holdings were made possible by increased funds on local, state, and Federal levels. Since the professional librarians are busy with teaching duties much of the day, the library could not remain open without the help of student assistants, each of whom spends an hour daily performing the necessary duties.

Articles were written, heads were selected and layout pages were drawn . . . then discarded as staff members began again, hoping to achieve a product satisfactory to all. Editors Mike Goad and Dianne Faker, guided by the sponsor, Mrs. Florence Bowman, gained journalistic experience with each successive deadline. Layout manager Alana Knochel and copywriter Deb May combined ideas in an effort to produce good pages. Sales and ads were handled by business managers Linda Goad and Duane Taulman while Charles Hansell snapped photos.

One of the most anticipated choral activities of the year is the musical comedy. Weeks of hard work and a talented and interested director such as Mr. Donald B. Ratcliff are necessary for a successful production. Besides discharging traditional spring duties such as providing music for Baccalaureate and the spring concert, the chorus performed in the contest.

The Music Department, under the direction of Mr. Donald B. Ratcliff, offered the Golden Note Award for the second consecutive year. This award is given to outstanding musicians who have accumulated 1750 points in four years by participating in the various solo and ensemble contests. The Psi Iota Xi Sorority presented the traditional Senior Music Award and thirty tickets to the Indianapolis Symphony. In addition to preparing the classical compositions selected for District Band Contest, this year held at Remington, musicians presented band shows at two ball games. They executed tricky footwork and flashy drills while playing selections of jazz and popular music.

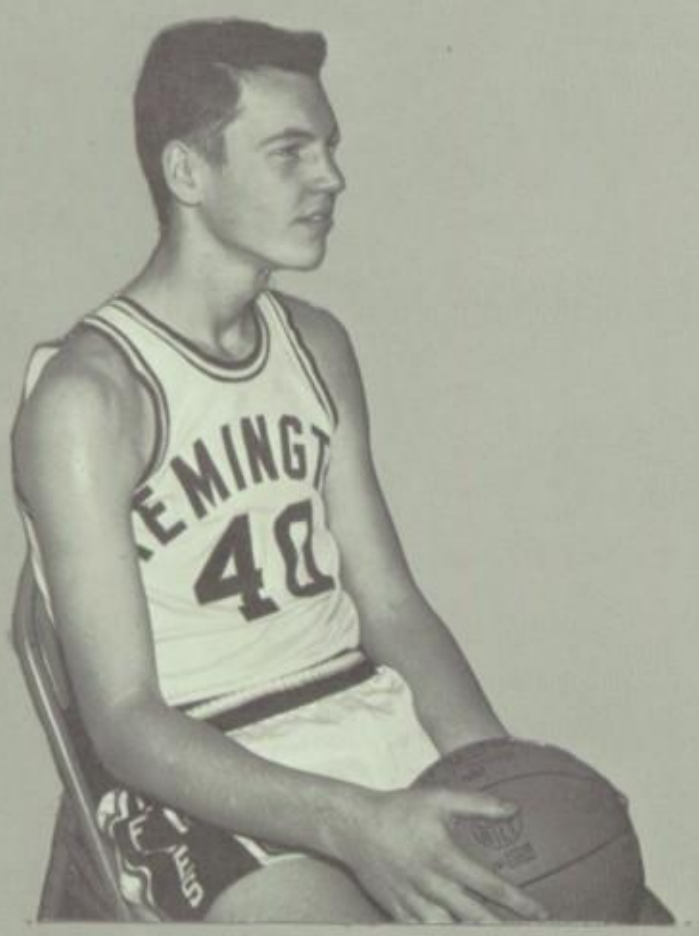
ATHLETICS



The thrill of each school year is heightened with the coming of the basketball season, almost always the favorite among the various athletic activities. Implanted in the minds of enthusiastic Rifle fans is the excitement of pep sessions, rival games, cheerleading competition, thundering chants, tourneys, sectionals, the tears of defeat, and the triumphant shouts of victory. Important to the players is the satisfaction derived from the development of sportsmanship and ability, an accomplishment rewarded tangibly by honor jackets and blankets. Such is the picture created--the image of athletics.

MISCELLANEOUS

Throughout the year, work on class play productions and the all-school musical comedy take many evening hours from the students' schedules. As they work to complete realistic scenery, gather appropriate costumes, and polish speaking lines, an element of fun appears, transforming work into enjoyment. Then too, students are often busy selling popcorn and candy, attending banquets and assembly convocations, and participating in concerts and programs. Each student, in his own unique way, will remember such activities.
